MANUFACTURERS' CONFERENCE HELD AT HARTFORD Sir Stephenson Kent Describes Meth ods Adopted in England.

At a conference of representative manufacturers of Connecticut and the members of the British Labor Administration Mission, held under the auspices of the Connecticut State Council of Defense, in the capitol, Sir Stephenson Kent, K. C. B., head of the mission, a member of the munitions ministry of Great Britain and director of its labor supply department, described methods adopted by his country in meeting labor problems that have arisen during the war in connection with manufacture of munitions. He emphasized the necessity Great Britain had met to make best possible use of its skilled labor, to possible use of its skilled labor, to revent any waste of man power and p use each man to the best advanfor use each man to the best advantage.

Sir Stephenson told of a triangular agreement made recently between capital, labor and the British government estallabling the following features by law; (1). That the trade unions give up during the war, all the restrictive practices developed in prewar years; (2) that employer's profits be definitely restricted; (3) that no strikes or lockouts be declared during the duration of the war and that all disagreements be submitted to compulsory arbitration. Wages were fixed at the then existing scale and the government agreed to make awards if necessary to meet increases in the cost of living.

As the war goes on, Sir Stephenson said, the government has found it necessary to develop methods of distributing its man power properly and of transferring industries from populars.

recessary to develop methods of distributing its man power properly and of transferring industries from non-essential to munitions lines. He congratulated the United States on having adopted the selective draft at the start and thus avoiding the possibility of sending skilled mechanics to the front. The British government, he added, has provided skilled labor for munitions plants by creating an army of about 300,000 munitions worker volunteers ready to be transferred on call wherever they are needed. As result there is hardly any skilled labor in Great Britain today which is not used almost exclusively in war work, though there is no industrial conscription. There are few factories which are not wholly devoted to the production of devoted to the production munitions or similar goods. For in-stance, there is not an automobile manufacturer in England who has produced a pleasure car within the past eighteen months. Sir Stephenson past eighteen months. Sir Stephenson attacked as vicious the practice of enticing labor from one factory to another during war time, saying that the problem had been met in Britain by fixing wages by agreement for all factories alike.

G. H. Baillie, chief technical dilu-tion officer of the British munitions ministry, told the manufacturers how his government had met the dearth of skilled labor by transferring skilled skilled labor by transferring skilled workmen from non-essential to essential trades, training unskilled workmen and employing women in munitions and other industries. He said that there are about 1,000,000 women now working in British munitions factories. They get the same wages as men and their work is as satisfactory. The only restrictions on hours of labor are those imposed by local conditions and agreements, Mr. Baillie said, but the average, which is found more satisfactory than longer hours, is fifty-three hours a week.

About 100 manufacturers attended the conference, which was presided over by Herbert Knox Smith.

A conference held later in the day was attended by about 75 representatives of various labor organizations in Connecticut. The members of the mission repeated the descriptions of labor administration in Great Britain which they had given to the manufacturers.

Captain Cyril Asquith aposther mem-administration in Great Britain which they had given to the manufacturers. Captain Cyril Asquith, another member of the mission, who is a son of Former Premier Herbert Asquith, held a conference with the district exemption boards of the state at which he told what steps had been taken in his country to exempt skilled mechanics from army service.

COAL SITUATION IS SERIOUS IN STATE

Wood for Fuel May Solve the Prob-

Coal is in great demand all through New England, but, in spite of the best endeavors of the fuel administrators, the supply has fallen far behind the requirements. The situation is seri-ous, in Connecticut, as well as in the other New England states, and the cutting of wood for fuel is being urg-ed as an aid in solving the problem. At the present time, this section is several million tons of soft coal short of its needs, and while the hard coal supply was reasonably satisfactory two months ago there was a falling off during September and October, so that there is not enough now coming forward to meet the increased uses.

Every effort has been and is being made by Thomas W. Russell, federal full administrator for Connecticut and chairman of the coal committee of the Connecticut State Council of Defense, to facilitate shipments and to secure the economical utilization of the coal received. Many relatively unnecessary forms of use have been curtailed or even eliminated.

The fact remains that the outlook for any improvement in future deliveries for New England is unfavorable, Mr. Russell said Thursday and
